First, read the following lead:

Recent attendance numbers at local universities have shown an increasing number of new graduates (and even past graduates) enrolling back into school for advanced degrees or specialty training. Most of this comes from the lack of jobs for new grads, and it seems to be a good way to pass the time during our economic downturn. On the outside, it would seem like these students have the right idea. If you can't join the workforce now, why not bulk up on extra degrees, certifications and specialized training?

Write a response to the following question: "Is going back to school in recession a good idea?" by means of an English composition of about 250 – 300 words in length (80%), containing a title in its proper format (10%) and no less than four paragraphs (10%).
